Teaching Experience

I have helped many friends and acquaintances formulate an attack plan for the LSAT. For students who already had a score and were looking to improve upon that, I helped them evaluate strengths and weaknesses and crack through the plateau that was previously holding them back.

Outside of academic tutelage, I worked for two years as the Supervisor of Training at a Bus Garage. Unconventional, I know, but my main purpose there was to develop and implement a curriculum designed to maximize our passing rate for a notoriously difficult test. In my time there, in combination with my own LSAT studies, I developed the skills required to get you the score you need.

LSAT Tutoring Approach

I have a strong belief that learning the LSAT is not a ‘one size fits all’ type of test. With that being said, my primary focus will be identifying and working to improve your problem sections. In some cases, students struggle more with test taking strategies than the actual content of the test. In others, students need a ground-up approach. I pride myself on being able to adjust my tutelage to best accommodate you and your needs.
